Andrew Roy

Andrew Roy is the Foreign Editor for BBC News. He is responsible for international news coverage on English output for BBC TV, radio and online, both domestically and globally. BBC News has more than two thousand staff in 50 bureaus around the world who gather and file reports for all of the BBC's news programmes across English and 42 language services.

Andrew joined the BBC in 1987. He worked first in the BBC's World Service Radio Newsroom, before becoming a television field producer. Andrew moved to the BBC's Washington bureau in 1994 and spent seven years as North America Bureau Chief, then five years as the BBC's Europe Bureau Chief, based in Brussels.

Returning to London Andrew joined BBC World News, the BBC's commercially funded international news channel.

He was Head of News Business and Sport at the channel until taking on the role of Foreign Editor in June 2013.

Andrew was born Christchurch and raised in Palmerston North. He attended Massey and Canterbury Universities – reading English. He began his career in journalism as a trainee for Radio New Zealand in Christchurch.

NZUGA

The New Zealand University Graduates' Association holds 3 suppers annually, where a speaker is invited to talk on a field of interest to New Zealanders. The NZUGA seeks to bring New Zealand graduates and friends in the UK together in an arena of mutual interest in socialising, discussion and learning. Please visit www.nzuga.co.uk for more info.
